

Martin Luther King, Jr.

Martin Luther King, Jr. was a great man. He is now famous for his speech "I Have A Dream". He always fought for what was right and also tried and tolled the people that followed him to not fight in violence. He always thought that there was no difference between people with different skin color which is true. So he always said and all ways fought for the reason that all men are equal.

When he wrought the letter from when he was in the Birmingham Jail. He wrought a letter about how the people with different skin tone weren't different from everyone else, and that it isn't fare for them to be mutuality and whatever happens it spread's too quickly.

When he said "we" he meant everybody that has been treated differently, rejected, disgraced only because they look a little different from another person. The destiny he talked about; that destiny is today, where all of us boy and girl, different color skin, hair, eye color doesn't matter. We can all live the same lives and not have to be segregated. Or have to tremble in fear that when we go outside in public that we will be harassed or get hurt. We can all go to school, hang out, and be with each other.

I also agree with the fact that we are all connected in some way. Ether by friends, family, workers, neighbors, and even school mates we are all connected somehow and always will be. If you ask me I think our future is very bright but if we helped others fix their lives. I know that most people would say to stop wars that happen between countries but if you ask me that won't happen. But we can help be helping others.

His speech united America from segregation, and made him famous. He didn't want all the fam though; he just wanted to stop segregation between different races. And his speech worked. It touched so many peoples heart that (including the president), that he even won the Nobel Peace Prize for his great work.

His wake up call to the U.S was very important. Without it things wouldn't be the same today. And it teaches young kids today like me and others that we are all the same. We all bleed red, we have a brain, and we all have the same possibility's in life to succeed.

So in our conclusion Martin Luther King Jr was an amazing man. He may have died an early and awful death but he made sure that with his last breath or behind bars he would make a difference and he would help those that are in his situation. He changed this country to be great and equal. We all have the same rights as one another. And that wont change thanks to Martin Luther King Jr.

So, thank you Martin Luther King Jr you made a difference. A difference that will last forever!
